Transcultural Health Care Resources

CulturedMed

The SUNY Institute of Technology library is the home for "CulturedMed", a Resource Center of print materials and electronic databases dealing with culturally competent health care for refugees and immigrants. The bibliographies focus on articles that discuss health beliefs or ethnographic information about the groups. The Web site also contains links to relevant resources about refugees and immigrants for nursing students, health care providers, social workers, medical interpreters, and other interested people.

Transcultural Nursing Society

In 1974, the Transcultural Nursing Society was founded as a worldwide organization for nurses interested in advancing transcultural nursing in education and practice. The mission of the global Transcultural Nursing Society is to ensure that the culture care needs of the people in the world will be met by nurses prepared in transcultural nursing. The Web site provides information about the activities of the Society, courses in transcultural nurses, publications, research, and scholarships.

The Transcultural Nursing & Healthcare Association

The Transcultural Nursing and HealthCare Association (TCHNA) was founded in 1998 by a group of British nurses. The Association receives help and support from the Foundation of Nursing Studies. The Web site presents examples of culturally competent healthcare, ideas and practice that have been submitted by TCNHA members (on cancer counselling, developing palliative care, working with ethnic minorities, refugees, evaluating and managing transcultural health care services).

Diversity Rx

The Web site is a comprehensive clearinghouse of information on model programs, policies and legal issues related to cross-cultural health, and produced by the National Conference of State Legislatures, the Kaiser Family Foundation, and the "Resources for Cross Cultural Health Care". The quarterly newsletter, Cross Currents, includes news and analysis of cross-cultural health issues; program profiles, training and curriculum reviews; and forums on topics of current interest.
